GRENOBLE, France -- PX'Therapeutics is pleased to announce the launching of a Phase 1 clinical trial of a prophylactic vaccine against HIV entitled: "Phase 1, Randomised, Single-centre, Observer-blind Clinical Trial of Safety and Immunogenicity of Nasal-prime and Intramuscular Boost Immunisation With EN41-FPA2 HIV Vaccine in Healthy Female Volunteers."

Funded under the European Union's Seventh Research Framework Programme (FP7), the collaborative project EuroNeut-41 aims at developing new vaccines able to elicit neutralizing antibodies that block entry of HIV into cells at mucosal sites and in blood. These vaccine candidates are derived from the envelope of HIV. The gp41 transmembrane envelope protein plays a key role in virus entry and displays regions that are well preserved among sub-types. It is expected that antibodies directed against this protein will provide sterilizing immunity against a broad range of HIV sub-type viruses.

The EuroNeut-41 project involves 17 partners, including Sanofi Pasteur (Marcy l'Etoile, France) as the coordinator of the project, the University of Granada (Granada, Spain) for the design of the constructs, Polymun Scientific (Vienna, Austria) for the formulation of the product, Clinical Research Centre, University of Surrey (Guildford, United Kingdom) as the Principal Investigator, and PX'Therapeutics (Grenoble, France) for the process development, GMP manufacturing of the protein along with the sponsorship of the trial.
